THE REAL COLONEL SELLERS Optimistic James Lampton, as Mark Twain Knew Him.

In the opening chapter of his "Autobiography," printed in the first fortnightly number of the North American BY Review, Mark Twain tells thus of the original Colonel Sellers:

Many persons regarded Colonel Sellers as a fiction, an invention, an ex- Up to Ninth Inning He Had Registered travagant impossibility, and did me the honor to call him a "creation," but they were mistaken. I merely put him on paper as he was. He was not a person who could be exaggerated. The lucidents which looked most extravagant, both in the book and on the stage, were not inventions of mine, but were facts of his life, and I was present when they were developed,

John T. Raymond's audiences used to come near to dying with laughter over the turnip eating scene; but, exdetails. The thing happened in Lamp- Cincinnatis their two runs, ton's own house, and I was present. In fact, I was myself the guest who ate the turnips. In the hands of a great actor that piteous scene would have Raymond was great in humorous portrayal only. In that he was superb, he was wonderful-in a word, great. In all things else he was a pygmy of the

The real Colonel Sellers as I knew him in James Lumpton was a pathetic and beautiful spirit, a manly man, a straight and honorable man, a man with a big, foolish, unselfish heart in his bosom, a man born to be leved, and he was loved by all his friends and by his family worshiped. It is the right word. To them he was but little less than a god. The real Colonel Sellers was never on the stage. Only half of him was there. Raymond could not play the other half of him. It was above his level. There was only one man who could have played the whole of Colonel Sellers, and that was Frank

I saw him last in 1884 when it had been twenty-six year since I ate the basin of raw turnip and washed them down with a bucke of water in his house. He was become old and white headed, but he entered to me in the same old breezy way o his earlier life, and he was all ther yet-not a detail wanting. The happy light in his eye, the abounding hope in his heart, the persuasive tongue, the miracle breeding imagination-they were all there, and before I could turn around he was polishing up his Aluddit's lamp and flashing the secret riches of the world before me.
